The proportion of patients with restless legs syndrome who continue to have symptoms after treatment with gabapentin and pregabalin: A systematic review. The purpose of this systematic review was to assess the proportion of patients with restless legs syndrome (RLS) who continue to have symptoms after treatment with gabapentin and pregabalin. Systematic search of the literature. The search was conducted in Medline, Embase, Cochrane Library, and CINAHL from the year 2010 to present. The target population was adult patients with RLS. Participants were treated with gabapentin or pregabalin. Comparisons were those patients treated with placebo, another anti-RLS drug, or another drug for other indications. The main outcomes were symptoms reported in RLS patients following treatment with gabapentin or pregabalin. The proportion of patients with RLS who continue to have symptoms following treatment with gabapentin or pregabalin was reported. The risk of bias assessment was done for included studies. A total of 28,879 patients were included in the final analysis. Twenty-three studies were identified; 10 were randomised controlled trials. The pooled proportion of patients with RLS who continued to have symptoms after treatment with gabapentin and pregabalin were 0.82 (95% confidence interval (CI) 0.71-0.93) and 0.85 (95% CI 0.73-0.95), respectively. The proportion of patients with RLS who continue to have symptoms after treatment with gabapentin and pregabalin was relatively high. Thus, clinicians should take the symptom-relieving effect of these drugs into consideration when deciding whether to continue treatment.// RUN: %clang_cc1 -fsyntax-only -verify -Wno-objc-root-class %s // expected-no-diagnostics @interface NSObject @end @protocol NSCopying -(id) copy; @end @protocol NSMutableCopying -(id) mutableCopy; @
