Kim Jong Un thwarts nuclear test North Korea defied UN Security Council sanctions by setting off a nuclear device on July 6, 2012, in what appeared to be a disguised underground test of a nuclear weapon. AFP - North Korea defied UN Security Council sanctions by carrying out its third nuclear test on Monday, a day after Kim Jong-Un staged an extraordinary meeting with his military commanders to discuss preparations for a new military strike. The 6.3-magnitude explosion went off some 260 kilometers (160 miles) west of Pyongyang, Yonhap news agency said, citing the South's defence ministry. North Korea's state media failed to mention the test. The test follows a defiant 13-minute speech on Thursday in which Kim Jong-Un rallied his troops on "the road to victory" and promised to step up a series of missiles tests in response to UN sanctions. Hours earlier, Kim presided over a high-level meeting of his ruling Workers Party's Central Military Commission (CMC), which decides on military matters and is made up of his two top deputies and other senior officers, state media said. "The general staff informed me that they have thoroughly prepared for all scenarios and the army and people are rushing forward to the final battle to single-handedly improve the self-defence capability of the country," a handout issued by the Korean Central News Agency quoted the CMC as saying. What's New In?

Version: 3.20.4278.0 Link: ===== SCOUT CC 2018 Features: Scout CC is a quick way for developers to see internal information about their Flash Player runtime environment, such as current memory usage, CPU and GPU usage, stage timeline and sequencing, profile level statistics, performance budgets, and other information. Scout has easy-to-understand visualizations of the data so that developers can see precisely which parts of the Adobe Flash Player runtime are creating their problems. You can access the following types of information from Scout:

- CPU usage – Compare the CPU usage of various parts of your project, including SWFs, ActiveMovie, and the web browser.
- RAM usage – See how your SWF is allocated RAM in different parts of your project.
- Stage timeline and sequencing – You can see the stage timeline for your SWF, which includes the current frame, time, status, and event callbacks. You can also see the current sequence of frames in the timeline.
- Profiles – Check out your current profile settings. Track allocations for animation, as well as various stage and prefetch settings.
- Current configuration – Find out if your web browser is using the hardware graphics and CPU, and which rendering or GPU implementations of Stage3D are being used.
- Performance budget – See the performance budgets for various parts of your SWF.
- Current environment – Find out which Flash Player components are running on your system, what OS you are using, and more.
- Sequencing – See the sequence of frames in your timeline.
- Canvas history – View which bitmaps or Text and BitmapFill objects have been drawn onto the canvas and which operations are using each of them.

In addition to these features, Scout CC monitors various events in the runtime and sends these out as activity streams so you can see what's going on in real time. Activity streams can be viewed with different filters so that you can see specific aspects of information such as bytecode information, variables, frame events, and more. Activity streams are now synchronized across all the platforms that you use Scout on, so there is no longer the need to subscribe to, and work with, a third-party streaming service. Adobe Scout CC works with any folder with a.flm (Flash Animation) file extension and any SCOUT-enabled AIR application.
